Energy plans

WASTE to energy company Pacific Pyrolysis says it would like to create energy from discarded nappies but until that day it will concentrate on organic waste. Pacific Pyrolysis is seeking to raise between $2.2 million to $4 million from an initial public offer of shares and then list on the Australian Securities Exchange. "The proven waste management technology can divert large volumes of waste materials from landfill, will value add to the treatment of organic waste and low-grade biomass and create valuable energy and biochar," chief executive John Glen said.
